To a certain extent this revalsion of shall refuse its confidence to the compants of the feeling is not only natural but excusable: We in Ministerial benches, Architecon Wordsworth, Europe are accustomed to a system of warfare in his reply to the to-called Liberal gandidates on a smaller area than that of the American for the Royal country of Barks, has plainly set it before the constituencies. The depial of an even destroys an army, is accepted as the final arbitra-handed justice to the Oburch of Finglend, the remember of a dispute between two nations. It happens, fusal to increase an Epigognate established when probably, that the territory in dispute can be easily | the nation was comparatively in swadding plotlies; necapied by an army of moderate size. When and to adapt it to the larger requirements and the defender is no longer in the field this actual | wants of its advancement to the stature, of its occupation, of course, settles the question. No growth and menhood, may reasonably be made a army that the world has ever seen could perma- ground of a want of pelitical confidence in a ruprenently occuppy the Southern States of North Ame- sentative. Dr. Wordsworth, "faithful among the rice. The area is far too vast to be held by an faithless found," has the boldness to littur; in a meinvader. The population is far too numerous ment of emergency, the voice of warning. It is and too proverful to submit for any length of to be hoped that he will not stand along but that time to a rule of which it disapproves. This is the is the pioneer and mouthpiese of pinny others one particular in which the experience of Euro, who will re-echo his contiments, and emulate his pean were affords us no oritorion of the result of example, when he tells, with all the candour of a the great war in America. There is another settled conviction, the Ministerial candidates for difference which is of even greater importance. his country, "I cannot honestly give my vote/in European wars have had various causes.
